

This has to work, right? Right?

Here we go

me

God says

Every one stay calm!

RUMBLE

RUMBLE

Elijah
Chorn

When I chose my artistic media, I wanted my characters to be more vibrant and not have the background draw away from that, and so I made my characters marker and the little bit of background pencil. For all the large group of Israelites, I enlarged myself to show detail and thoughts. The thoughts included a few doubts about whether one man, even with help from God, could single-handedly free them. I added a rumbling because it seems that the only way for the Red Sea to split in half would be a major earthquake happening at the perfect time. I made Pharaoh's armies mainly just squiggles because of time requirements and dust, and I thought it might be nice to add God sending power to Moses to show where Moses' sea splitting comes from. The Pharaoh in the back is telling his armies to move forward, because I wanted to have the corrupt king of Egypt somewhere in the picture. There are pyramids in the background to show it's Egypt, but there wasn't much else so people would stand out. I had Moses thinking "God says 'Split the sea'" rather than God saying it, because no one else can hear it, and Moses telling everyone to stay calm plays on the fact that they were doubting and fearing for their lives.